Historic Chapel Project by Dean Lutes Wonders of Wood in Tracy City, TN

Wonders of Wood used Mohawk Products the project seen here, including M520-206 Lt. Walnut Ultra® Penetrating Stain and M504-1478 Finisher's Glaze Glazing Stain and also M614-2440 DuraCoat™ Pre-Catalyzed Lacquer.

Dean's assignment was to create an oak electronics control booth hiding sophisticated audio equipment. While that sounds simple at first, the control box was to be installed in the famous All Saints' Chapel, a beautiful landmark at the University of the South (commonly known as "Sewanee"), which broke ground in 1905.

The regal-looking chapel is known for its ornate, Victorian Gothic-style architecture, patterned after the Church of England style emanating from Oxford, England, a design movement that began in the late 1740's in England. The Gothic revival movement had a dramatic influence on architecture around the world, especially on educational campuses.

"What makes this job so challenging and fun is that the control booth, which we're making out of red oak, cannot look out of place in the chapel. On the contrary, it must look as though it's been part of the chapel's historic interior for over a century."

Lute says his business has grown steadily over the years by word of mouth advertising. His shop handles everything from simple woodworking jobs to ornate reproductions of antique furniture, porch columns, windows and doors, and custom cabinets.

Thank you to Wonders of Wood for allowing us to share their inspiring story with all of our readers.
